

Certified Food Protection Manager Course

(Formerly known as Qualified Food Operator)

Ledge Light Health District offers ServSafe®, a nationally recognized food safety education program developed by the National Restaurant Association. ServSafe® meets the FDA Food Code requirements for Class II, III, and IV foodservice establishments starting January 1, 2019.

Our ServSafe® courses are taught by licensed Sanitarians who are certified food inspectors. All classes are held at Ledge Light Health District at 216 Broad Street in New London from 9 a.m. to approximately 5 p.m. The course is $180.00 per person and includes a ServSafe® Manager textbook, eight-hour course, examination, and a ServSafe® Food Protection Manager Certificate (for individuals who pass the exam). The classes are taught in English, but textbooks are available in multiple languages (see below). Payment must be received prior to the class to reserve a space in the course. Please fill out the box below to register. If you miss a scheduled class, please call us at (860) 448-4882 to arrange a different date, as you will not be guaranteed a spot in the next class. It is highly recommended that you register and pick up your book at least two weeks in advance of the class to review the book and material.

The re-test fee for failed exams is $90. If you have not previously trained with us or would like to renew your expired certificate, you will be required to attend the entire 8-hour class.
